Technology should work for EVERYBODY

Imagine a city where EVERYONE can:

Have what's needed to learn online.

Use the internet, smart phones and computers to find work, apply for jobs and potentially work from home.
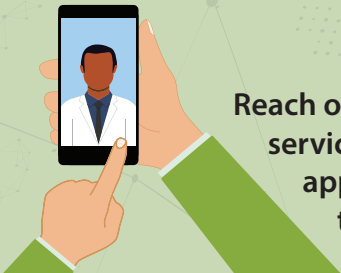

Connect with family, friends, or groups to help them, even if they're far apart.

Stay safe and connected online to the information they need during emergencies.

Reach online health care services, like booking appointments or talking to a doctor.

Comfortably explore new ideas, be creative, start businesses or use government services online.

When everyone can access the digital services, tools and supports they need, no matter what device they are using, where they are, where they live or how much money they make

…that's DIGITAL EQUITY

But right now, everyone can't. Why not?

Costs: Not everyone has smart phones, computers or home internet because they can't afford it.

Accessibility: Technology such as websites may not be designed so everyone can use them easily, regardless of their abilities.

Digital skills: Not everyone knows how to use technology or where to get help with it.

Let's build a Calgary where no one is left behind

The City of Calgary is finding ways to reach DIGITAL EQUITY, where all people can connect online the way they want and for what they need, no matter where they are, where they live, or how much money they make.

By working together with other groups in the community and with YOU, we're building a stronger city that includes everybody.

Find out more about digital equity and what is available to help

Use the QR code or visit our website at calgary.ca/digitalequity