TYPICAL CHANGE

How your property tax may change as a result of the annual assessment

Property assessments redistribute property tax within the city by measuring how individual property values have changed relative to the typical change for that property’s assessment class (residential or non-residential). If a property has gone up more than the typical change, that property’s tax bill will be proportionately larger. If a property has gone up less than the typical change, that property’s tax bill will be proportionately smaller.

Residential and non-residential typical value changes are available on calgary.ca/assessment. To get an estimate of what your 2024 property tax will be, use the Tax Calculator on calgary.ca/assessment.

Determining and supporting your City services

What are your priorities?

Each fall, and throughout the year, we gather citizen input, which informs Council’s budget decisions, and strategic direction.

How does The City collect my share?

Now that Calgarians input has been collected, budgets set and your property value assessed, your tax bill is calculated and mailed to you.

How much money is needed?

Council considers your input to set or adjust the City’s Plans and Budgets to provide services Calgarians value and to ensure The City’s long-term financial sustainability.

How is the budget supported, and what is my share?

The budget (for services, programs and civic partners) is supported by user fees and property tax. Your share of property tax is partly determined by your property’s value (property assessment) and what is my share?

How does the province impact my property tax bill?

Council waits for the release of the provincial budget to determine what funding will be made available to The City, before setting the tax rates. Usually more than a third of your residential property tax, collected by The City, goes to the Province.
